The Choir Invisible

A CENTERING THOUGHT:

“When family gathers around for a dying loved one, I have realised, that it probably does more good for the living, than for the dying. Sometimes, death can bring the living together, and death can cause the living to find solace in one another. In this way, death is a part of life, and those who die can in fact give gifts to the living, gifts that they were not able to give while they were still alive and well.”

MUSIC NOTES: The music today, drawn mainly from African-American sources, speaks to the heart our 6th UU principle (The goal of world community with peace, liberty, and justice for all) - lifting up the communal experience of death as a facilitator of each of the principle's elements. In the spirit of the New Orleans funeral-music tradition, the morning's selections deal with death as a convener of community (Gather the Spirit, Just a Closer Walk, When the Saints Go Marching In), an inspiration to justice work (Work Song, The Preacher), a portal for individual liberty (There is More Love Somewhere, Spirit of Life), and an usher into peace (What a Wonderful World).

Special thanks to all who helped with today's services, especially . . .
